

R E M A R K S
ON THE
D E F E N C E
OF THE
Present ADMINISTRATION.

---

Second EDITION.

---

WITH AN
A P O S T I L E
ON A
P A M P H L E T

Just Publish'd, Entituled,
CONSIDERATIONS
ON THE
Present STATE of Affairs
IN
E U R O P E.

THE

OF

THE

OF

THE

Second Edition

WITH A

APPENDIX

PAMPHLET

OF THE

CONSIDERATIONS

OF THE

Principles of Arithmetic

EUROPE

R E M A R K S

ON A

PAMPHLET

ENTITL'D A

D E F E N C E

O F T H E

M E A S U R E S

O F T H E

Present ADMINISTRATION.

---

Viewing present, past and future,
As thou keepst eternal watch,
Janus say, for thou art neuter,
Hast thou seen our Walpole's Match?
Phebus in thy radiant Journey,
Canst thou to a greater turn thee?

Mitchel. D. Courant.

— Nil est quod credere de se

Non possit, cum laudatur, Diis æqua potestas.

Juv.

---

L O N D O N:

Printed by A. M O O R E, near St. Paul's.
1731. (Price 6 d.)

REMARKS

ON A
HARVARD-COLLEGE LIBRARY
MAY 28, 1913
SUBSCRIPTION FOR
ENGLISH HISTORICAL TRACTS

DEFENCE
OF THE
MEASURES
OF THE
PACIFIC ADMINISTRATION

Viewing present, past and future
As thou seest eternal wisdom
Yours say, for thou art master
Hast thou seen our "Albatross" fly?
Present in the radiant journey
Call thou to a greater trip than
Miles D. Crocker
New light, new wisdom, new
Miles D. Crocker

LONDON:
Printed by A. Moxon, near St. Paul's.
(Price 6s.)
1731.

REMARKS ON THE DEFENCE

OF THE

Present ADMINISTRATION.

IT is observ'd by those who attend the Old-Baily, that more Criminals are convicted by their own Evidence than by the Testimony of those who appear against them. And the most infallible Method of discovering the real Designs, and knowing the very Hearts of Men, is to compare their Actions with their Actions, and what drops from them on one Occasion, with what they say on another.

THE Defence of the Measures of the Administration, begins with an Acknowledgment, That the Out-cries and Complaints against them are loud and numerous. Had they given one Instance in History, or Experience (for now the Ministry speak themselves) to shew that ever that was the Case, without substantial Grounds and Foundation, they had made one Step towards satisfying some, and silencing others.

THE long Continuance of one Man, or Set of Men in the Ministry, may indeed raise the Envy of the Few, the very Few, whose Birth, Fortune, and Parts entitle them to a Share in the Government ; but while the Honour, and Interests of the Nation are entire, and secure from Danger, the Multitude, who have no other Concern in the Distribution of Court-Favours, than to see them bestowed on Persons of Integrity and Abilities, will never take Part with them ; and consequently the Out-cries and Clamour of these Few can never be loud and numerous. Let those who oppos'd
the

the Court in 1717, 1718, and 1719, reflect how vain their Attempts were to stir up and engage the Clamour of the People against the Administration they labour'd to calumniate and destroy.

SINCE this Confession, then, has drop'd from the Pens of these great Politicians, the Inference must necessarily be true, that there are Defects, there is a just Foundation, and that such Out-cries make strongly against the Abilities and Merit of a Ministry; and it confirms a just Observation, that the Opinion of the Multitude is seldom, if ever wrong.

BUT what follows? "Hope and Dependence, which were their Supports at first, are chang'd into Despair and Revenge, and become their Obstacles at last."

THIS can relate only to Persons upon whom a Minister has bountifully bestow'd Promises of Preferments and Rewards; or to the Hopes and Dependence of the People, that he will serve his Country with Ability and Integrity. But if, to provide for, and enrich his Creatures and Relations, he breaks his Faith to the first, shall not the World, with Justice, accuse him of Baseness and Perfidy? And if through Want of Knowledge, or selfish and interested Views, he fails in the second, shall not his Country require at his Hands the Injuries, the Losses, and Insults they have suffer'd, and shall his thread-bare Artifices and Expedients, for ever, screen him from the dismal Effects of an enrag'd and disappointed People?
of

THAT something of this Nature is dreaded, however it may be thought proper to dissemble these Fears, seems very plain from the frank Acknowledgment of one in high Station, said to be Author of the Observations on the Craftsman, publish'd in the Daily Courant of the 24th of December, who concludes his Declamation with these remarkable Words. "As long
"as such Freedoms of Writing and Speak"ing against the Measures of the Admi"nistration, are thought a necessary Part "of our Liberty, so long, I hope, our "Representatives will think a standing
"Army a necessary Part of our Constitu"tion."

LET us put these two together in their own Words. * The Popularity, if not the

---

* Def. p. 6.

Authority of the Ministry is lessen'd thro' their long Continuance in the Administration; and without a standing Army they cannot be supported.

A most comfortable Prospect to the People of Great Britain, whatever Light they take it in.

IT is found expedient in this Defence to fix the Æra of the Ministry's Power, to the Term of the Treaty of Vienna, in 1725. But if one Gentleman, who, without Offence, I hope, may be said to bear no small Share of the Merit of what has happen'd since, will take the Trouble to look into the Date of his Commission, he will find himself, I believe, of near four Years older standing than he wishes, or at least, cares to own at present. Upon due Reflection he will find too, that Britain enjoy'd all the Blessings of a profound Peace; that we lived in a strict Union with the Emperour; in good Terms with France and Spain; that our Trade flourish'd, and met with no Interruption; that we had a strong Interest in the Empire, independant of the Emperour; that with a much smaller Number of Forces than we have now, no foreign Troops in English Pay, we were were quiet at Home, and respected Abroad, when the Reins of Government drop'd into his Hands.

THESE unpropitious Incidents, these ominous Conjunctions complain'd of, the Cloud that was ready to break and burst out Ruin upon Britain, must therefore have been suffer'd to gather and come to Maturity, during the Space of Time which is artfully sunk in the Defence.

WITH what Wisdom our Affairs were then conducted, * what Opportunities were neglected, and whether the Measures enter'd into were distructive, or not; how far our refusing the sole Mediation of a Peace between the Emperour and Spain, and the Treatment of the Infanta, gave Occasion and Provocation to this dangerous Treaty, has, at the Beginning of every Session of Parliament, for these four Years past, been in some Measure enquir'd into? And I leave it to the World to determine for what Reasons it is now judg'd adviseable, to deprive a great M—r of the Honour of having serv'd his Country during so considerable a Space of Time. Certain it is, that, all that while, he was in the same high Station, which he still enjoys.

---

* p. 8.

W I T H what Truth then, with what Modesty is it affirm'd (p. 27.) That, " never was the Protestant Cause in " general in more Danger, than the " Gentlemen now in Power found it, ne- " ver was England nearer its Ruin, than " on their Coming to the Head of Af- " fairs?

B U T to smother the Transactions of these Four Years, and, if possible, to bury them in Oblivion; to render meritorious the Conduct of the Administration, the late Ministers are in this impartial Defence, most scandalously traduced, and most infamously slander'd.

T H E Wise, the Prudent, and steady Measures which they pursued, are treated as wild and extravagant, they are accus'd of Sloth and Negligence, * and of follow - ing Counfels destructive to their Country, and the Protestant Interest.

---

* p. 8.

As they were not reputed only (as is said here) but acknowledg'd to be Men of uperiour Parts and Learning, we are told (†) “ that it's a Doubt whether “ political Authors have not contributed
“ more to make bad, than good States“ men.

BUT now rejoice, O happy Nation!
“ You are blest'd with Men of such “ Genius and Judgment, (*) as are tru“ ly capable of applying the fine Rules
“ of these Authors! Who can distinguish “ precisely how far they are true, and “ when they suffer Exceptions.

“ IT is a good general Maxim, for In“ stance, to go to War rather than suffer
“ Insults; yet our great Politicians have dis“ covered that there are Cases in which plain“ ly nothing would be more mischievous.
They know, thank God, the Times and Seasons of putting up Affronts, and overlooking Injuries. O Fortunatam natam te. — Horace.

---

† p. 20.

* Ibid.

IT would be Injurious to the Memory of these great Men, upon this Occasion, when such — Comparisons are made, to enter into a Justification of their Conduct ; to mention the glorious Defeat of the Spanish Fleet ; the overthrow of the Minister, whose daring and extensive enterprises threatened all Europe with Blood and Confusion, and occasioned that short liv'd Interruption of Amity (tho' not of our Commerce) with Spain, and their procuring to be replac'd in his Stead the Secretray of State, who was constantly attach'd to the Interest of England, their close Adherence to the Maxims of the grand Alliance, and wisely Maintaining the mutual Confidence so Necessary to support it. Their Zeal in protecting the oppress'd Protestants in the Empire, and the memorable Treaty of London, which, had not more consummate Politicians succeeded them and overturn'd it, would have been an everlasting Bulwark to the Protestant Succession, and the Liberty of Britain.

THESE Ministers however, says this Gentleman, in a very reproachful Manner, contriv'd the Quarrel with Spain, and the South-Sea Project.

B

BUT,

BUT, did he understand any other Language besides his own, I could help him to a short History of these Times, writ by a Foreigner, that would shew him at once ( for at that Time, perhaps, he was not in the Secret ) the dangerous Tendency of Alberoni's Schemes, the surprising Success of his Preparations to execute them, and the signal Proofs these Ministers gave, on that Occasion, of their Intrepidity, the wise, the noble, and disinterested Sentiments that shin'd thro' their whole Conduct.

HE would see too, by the by, in that History an English Minister, like an old Roman, equally qualify'd for the Cabinet and the Field; the first in exposing himself to the Mercy of the Waves, and the Fire of the Spaniards, to animate the French Troops, and setting the first Torch to the Magazines and naval Stores of a Prince, who had, too rashly, dar'd to declare himself an Enemy to his King, and to his Country. He would see likewise the despicable Efforts of Rage and Disappointment, set forth in their liveliest Colours, and the Names of some, who who envy'd, tho' they never could rival the Glory of these Ministers, in constant Opposition to the Interest and Honour of the Nation.

T H E R E too, is to be found the Source of all these Calumnies, this low and ungentelemanly Detraction.

B U T cannot the Measures of the Administration be defended without Libelling, and Aspersing the Memory of the Dead? And have these great Men, who deserv'd so well of their Country, no Friend left who has Influence enough to suppress, in a M ——— Pamphlet, such false and unprofitable Abuse? If this be the Case, the World will still be of Opinion, “ that pointing out one Gentleman, as the whole Administration, does “ not proceed from Malice, but from “ Truth.

I have heard too, that the Schemes of a certain Gentleman in Concert with the Bank, which must have ended in the same Manner as the Project that was gone into, lay'd the Ministry under an absolute Necessity cessity of supporting the Proposals made by the South-Sea Company, in the Year 1720.

“ B U T the World does not so egregiously mistake the Talents and Characters of Men, as ever to forget his Method of delivering us from the Calamities of that Year, by Virtue of the memorable Bargain between these Two Companies, contriv'd, transacted, witness'd, and declar'd void by the Means of the same Person.

I N a Word, it may truly be said that the late Ministers found the Protestant Cause in eminent Danger, and that they left it in great Security. But Blundering was never heard of in the Days of S——d, and S——pe.

T H E First Instance this Gentleman gives of the Vigilance and Success of the present Ministry, in tracing out, and effectually discovering that great Event, the Alliance between the Emperor and Spain, is really diverting, and much might be said upon that Head. But I shall content my self with putting him in Mind

Mind of the Surprize and Confusion, that broke out in the Countenances of some, upon the first certain Accounts of that Treaty. How long was that before Count S——g had Orders to notify it to his late Majesty ; or had these vigilant and successful Gentlemen, “ in getting into “ the Cabinets of Princes, seen a Copy of it ’till it was communicated to them in Form by that Ambassador.

A great Pother is here made about the Honour due to those whose happy Applications to the Interests, Tempers, and Understanding of Men prevented France from giving into the Views of our Enemies, as they are call’d, and of curbing the Warlike Dispositions of the Cardinal de Fleuri.

HE, without Dispute, He alone, whose Peerless Art, Politeness, and Address effected this great Work, was capable to dissuade a French Minister from forwarding a Match which would have united, under the same Monarch, Spain and the Empire ; or (if the Author of the Enquiry coin’d a Lye to frighten us) to contribute in any Respect towards the Aggrandizement of the House of Austria. According to the System

System of Politicks lately discover'd, it is, and perhaps, always was the Interest of France so to do. But then he, the same he, who lugg'd about the Cardinal like a Pair of ———, kept France from accedeing to a Treaty contriv'd by Spain, and purchas'd at so extravagant a Price, chiefly to be reveng'd of France, for the Affront given in sending back the Infanta, in the shocking Manner it was done. " This I presume, cannot be said to be among these " Things which any Person might have done " as well, no Sir, give me leave to assure you " that it is no easy Thing to blunder after this " Manner.

NOR was the Administration, says our Author, * during the Progress of these salutary and arduous Negotiations, regardless of the Interest of the Nation in other Respects.

HOSIER was sent with a Fleet to the West-Indies, " The Scheme was, not " to make ourselves Masters of the Cargo

" of the Galleons, tho' we had it in our " Power, but to suffer our Ships to rot
 " there; This was necessary: And to allow
 " Part of the Treasure to pass thro' our " Squadron, whilst Gibraltar was besieg'd;
 " This was Politick. For great Care was taken
 " not to injure our Enemies, or aggravate
 " Matters by any malicious Hostility; but " rather bearing some small Violences, such as " the Siege of Gibraltar, and taking our " Merchants Ships wherever they met them.
 " This unprecedented Conduct sprung,
 " surely, from the best and weightiest Reasons
 " that Wisdom itself could dictate.

YET so malicious is the wicked World as to turn this most profound Wisdom into Ridicule; and so impudent are some as to call it downright Blundering and Folly. But these rash Men do not consider that the Folly of Ministers is preferable to the Wisdom of those who have no Title to dive into the Misteries of the Administration.

THE Idleness of prying into Things above our Reach is plainly evinc'd in this impartial Defence. It is prov'd, to a Demonstration, monstration, * that thro' this whole Scene, France has been our Bubble. "Their Arms, their Embassies, and their Treasures have been all this while, according to this Author, employ'd in our Service. If this is so, I humbly beg Leave to ask how it came to pass that France refus'd to declare War against Spain, when so strenuously insisted upon by the Favourite Ambassador? The Siege of Gibraltar, if Credit is to be given to what he says, was Casus Fæderis, by Virtue of a Declaration he prevail'd with them to sign some Months before that Siege happen'd? Yet some have had the Impudence to affirm, that he was laugh'd at and ridicul'd by the French Ministers, when he seem'd to be startled at their Refusal to fulfil their Engagement. And if their Treasures were employ'd for our Service, how came we to pay Part of the Subsidy to the Danish Troops, which, in Consequence of the Treaty of Hanover, France was to be at all the Charge of?

THO' these be Facts, the Questions may nevertheless be very idle and impertinent.

BUT, had the French, in reality, been as much our Dupes, as we are given to understand, is it prudent at this Time to tell them so? I can conceive the Meaning of pretending "That our Interests and political Views are so interwoven and blended with theirs, that it is scarce possible for us to differ, or separate." That Part of the Pamphlet, skilfully translated, and transmitted to France, on a proper Occasion, might, for a Time, palliate other Views, and with the Help of strong Asseverations, keep Matters right there, 'till Submissions for former Ill-usage, and the Power of Entreaties procur'd us a new Ally. "The first therefore I cannot think necessary; the last may perhaps be Politick.

"AS to the Weight and Credit the Minister is said to have in the Councils of France," I humbly beg leave to offer this Caution; That One of the Articles of Impeachment against the Duke of Suffolk was, "His having made his Boasts, in Presence of many Lords, that his Influence and Credit at the Court of France, was no less than at that of England."

THIS therefore I take to be an Oversight of the Copyer, or a Typographical Error.

BUT much Labour is bestow'd to convince us that one of the chief Cares of the Ministry has been to reduce the Power of the Emperour. 'Till now I have always been accustomed to hear and did really believe that the Power of the House of Austria was constantly Beneficial, and never could be hurtful to Britain. But that, I suppose, is one of these antiquated Machiavilian Maxims which the System of Politicks, now in Vogue, has but quite out of Date.

TO this System we owe a Lesson entirely new, that the Conduct of Nations towards Nations, is founded upon the strong Ties of Gratitude and Obligations. * I must likewise acknowledge my self a thorough Infidel to this refin'd Way of thinking; and as all Confidence among the antient Allies of England is now lost, and, by this Defence, seems to be utterly laid aside and disregarded; and consequently the grand Alliance, which, 'till now, I have thought the only Security of the Protestant Succession, and the Liberty of Britain, is broke and dissolv'd; I must still hope that the new Security, which we are told, we have got in the Room of it, rests upon stronger and more solid Foundations, than the Gratitude of Spain for a Treaty unexecuted, and Advantages not yet obtain'd; or the imaginary Influence and Credit of any Minister in the Measures and Councils of France.

---

* p. 19.

P O S T.

P O S T S C R I P T.

I Must beg Leave to ask one more Question. In giving an Account of the trifling Expence we have been at, in purchasing the happy Situation, the blessed Security we enjoy, it is said that, besides the Powers of the North, (Sweden and Denmark, I know, we pay, and the Muscovites — are a barbarous Sort of a Nation) the Protestant Estates of the Empire are closely united for the Support of England. *

THE Hessians and the Duke of Wolfembutel we are well acquainted with, and we have heard of the King of Prussia, and the Saxons ; but it would give vast Satisfaction to know where the Territories of these other Princes, and Estates are situated.

---

* P. 23.

---

APOSTILE.

SINCE the foregoing Remarks were publish'd, another Ministerial Piece has appear'd, Entitl'd, Considerations on the Present State of Affairs in Europe, and I cannot help taking Notice of some new Things it contains.

WE are told by the Defender to what Degree France has been our Bubble, and we have now Assurances, of uncontestable Authority, that we trick'd Spain into the Treaty of Seville, † by making ar-rant Dupes of the Imperial Ministers.

IT is indeed wonderful, that a Truth so Honourable and Advantagious to the Administration, should have been sunk and suppress'd in a Pamphlet, publish'd at the Opening of the last Session of Parliament, writ by an intimate Friend

---

† Considerations, &c. p. 30, 31.

and

and Acquaintance of this Author, and Entitl'd, The Treaty of Seville and the Measures that have been taken for the four last Tears impartially consider'd. But however that is, I hope, Historians will now give over making that injurious Remark that England looses more by Treaties than she gains by Wars.

IT is to be hop'd too, that the Court of Vienna will not endeavour to return the Compliment and make Reprisals in the Treaty, now said to be on Foot, and that there never will be the least Foundation for calling this Treaty another Temporary Expedient.

IT is likewise to be hop'd that the Misunderstanding about the Schedula for the South Sea-Ship, and the Time of the Fair; and the Works lately begun at Gibraltar, did not proceed from the Spaniards opening their Eyes and Beginning to be sensible that they were too easily wheedled into the Treaty of Seville.

BUT as our being forsaken by the French, abandon'd by the Dutch, deserted by by Spain, and the World; in a Word, thrown into utter Confusion, * depends upon the Hessians being continued, no Man, who has the Interest, or Honour of his Country at Heart, can, surely be against it.

---

* Consider. p. 52.

F I N I S.